A Carpet Pest.

Housekeepers, says the Rochester Express. may be interested in learning that an insect called the Anthremus scrophulariæ, which deyours and rains carpets, has appeared in such numbers in Schenectady that the carpets all over that city have had to be taken up and cleaned. In Utica it has caused serious alarm. Carpets are not, however, its only food, as it infests wearing apparel hanging in closets or laid away in drawers. Unlike moths, it is said to prey upon cotton fabrics It is a very common and destructive European insect, but has not until recently been detected in the United States. Its peculiar forte is the eating of car-pets, and hence the familiar name, "carpet bug," which it has woo. It belongs to the family known as the Dermestidio, which comprises several of our most injurious depredators on animal substances, and is entirely different in appearance and habits from the well known carpet moth. It conceals itself beneath the borders of earpets nailed to the floor, and eats away those portions. Occasionally it gets in the cracks of the floor, following which it cuts across entire breadths of carpets, leaving a line which seems to have been cut by the seessors. It destroys new as well as old carpets, and, if allowed to oreed and multiply, may reduce us to bare floors soon. Professor J. A. Lintuer, State Entomologist, describes these interesting Anthremus scropbulariæ as a small ovate object, about one tenth of an inch in length, thickly clothed with numerous short bristle like hairs, and terminating in a pencil of these forming a tail. It is exceedingly active in its motions and pides away very rapidly. Like the house fly it disappears in winter, and eats only during the summer mouths. He said: "I captured several of the larvæ and fed them upon pieces of carpets in order to rear them. In September they had evidently marared and assumed their quiescent pupil state within the cine known for all complaints that horse flesh is skin of the larvæ first reut by a split along heir to. the back for the escape of the perfect insect. At this stage I was led by a study of its character to refer it, in ad probability, to the genus Anthremus. List week I had the great gratiheation of obtaining from the pui a the first example of the perfect usect. I was a very minute beetle, approximately one tenth of an JANNEY & CO inch in length, but beautifuly marked in a prettily arranged combination of red, white and brown. I had, beyond doubt, referred it to its proper genus. The detection of this insect adds to our tauba abother species of the dreaded genus of Authremus, perhaps to equal in its destructive agency the well-known museum pest, the A. varius, formerly known as A. musocorum, the obtiusive guest of all our collections of natural history, whose ravages it seems impossible fully to guard against and so exceedingly difficult to control." This pest, which is called the buffalo moth, is also committing ravages in New Jersey. A SOLDIER OF FORTUNE. - The Servian correspondent of the London News writes: "Exit Protopopof! Who, then, is Protopopof? Protopopot is a Russian soldier of fortune, whose acquaintance I first made during the Spanish | war at Bilbao, when he was a captain in Loma's division. When on my first visit to Alexina z I easually met Protopopoi in a coffee house. He was then in command of a couple of battalions of artillery, and he held the post of danger at Supovac, within sight of the Tuckish outposts. He had come back to Alexioa z f r orders, for a big drink, for money, and for tobacco. He gave me an invitation to come and stay with bim on the foreposts at Supovac, and went off next morning with rather a headache, but with a silver medal on his breast. From others I learned something of Protopopof's career in the service of Servia. He had joined as a volunteer, had got a battation command, and had been out to Saitschar. In one of the early fights there he had distinguished himself in a peculiar manner. He had gone forward alone, his battation having run away. He had come on a but in which he had found six Turkish soldiers. These he had slain sereatim. But he desired some evidence of his prowess; would he be believed if he recounted this story without evidence? So he cut off the cars of the six dead Turks, skewered the twelve cars on a piece of stick, and brought them back into the Servian camp as veucher for his valor. Transferred to the army of the Morava he did good service on the foreposts and gained the silver medal. Later, I heard of him as having distinguished himself in the combat of Mramor, and as having received the gold cross. Some little time afterward I met him in Belgrade, limping from the effect of a bullet wound in the foot, but full of pluck and determined to return to the front in a few days. When I came to Deligrad on a later visit I met him leaving hea quarters without his sword. He told me he was under arrest, but would not say for what reason. On inquiry I learned that he had received two hundred ducats for distribution among his com mand at Supevac in recognition of their ser vices to the Mramor aff ir. One story was that he had retained the whole amount of this mouey; another, that he kept back only fifteen ducats, and made himself merry ther on. Anyhow he was under arrest, and then I heard he was a risoner. The other day I was told he had been liberated, but degraded from his rank of officer, and allowed, upon his own carnest solicitation, to serve as a volunteer in the capacity of a private soldier. Last night, when sitting outside the c ffee-house here, I heard a row insid. Going in, because I heard a voice that seemed familiar to me, I found there Protopopof very drunk indeed, and in the heat of an altercation with the landlord. He was on his way to the rear with his arm in a sling. In the last ski mish a bullet had broken his arm, and gone through into his side, where it had inflicted a flesh wou d. He was supposed to be in the hospital, but the reckless turbulent rascal preferred the wine cup spite of his wound, and it was with difficulty that I got him to enter the wagon which was to convey him to Parajin. If there should be a war in China I should not wonder should I meet him there, or he may take his next service with the King of Dahomey.'
